LEXSEE 125 S. CT. 826

COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Petitioner v. JOHN W. BANKS, II COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Petitioner v. SIGITAS J. BANAITIS

(No. 03-892), (No. 03-907)

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

125 S. Ct. 826; 160 L. Ed. 2d 859; 2005 U.S. LEXIS 1370; 73 U.S.L.W. 4117; 94 Fair Empl. Prac. Cas. (BNA) 1793; 2005-1 U.S. Tax Cas. (CCH) P50,155; 18 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 106

November 1, 2004, Argued
January 24, 2005, Decided *

 Together with No. 03-907, Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Banaitis, on certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

NOTICE: [1] The LEXIS pagination of this document is subject to change pending release of the final published version.

PRIOR HISTORY: ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT. Banks v. Comm'r, 345 F.3d 373, 2003 U.S. App. LEXIS 19999 (6th Cir., 2003) Banaitis v. Comm'r, 340 F.3d 1074, 2003 U.S. App. LEXIS 17913 (9th Cir., 2003)

DISPOSITION: Reversed and remanded.

DECISION: [859]

As general rule for federal income tax purposes, when litigant's recovery of money judgment or settlement constituted gross income under § 61(a) of Internal Revenue Code (26 USCS § 61(a)), gross income held to include portion of recovery paid to litigant's attorney as contingent fee.

SUMMARY:

For federal income tax purposes, "gross income" is defined in § 61(a) of Internal Revenue Code (26 USCS § 61(a)) as "all income from whatever source derived."

After being discharged from his job as a California state employee, a taxpayer retained an attorney on a contingent-fee basis and filed against the state, in a United States District Court, a civil suit that alleged employment discrimination in violation of federal law. After trial had commenced in 1990, (1) the parties settled the suit for $464,000, and (2) the taxpayer paid $150,000 of this amount to his attorney pursuant to the fee agreement.

In 1997, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued the taxpayer--who had not included any of the $464,000 as gross income on his 1990 federal income tax return--a notice of deficiency for the 1990 tax year. The United States Tax Court, upholding the Commissioner's determination, determined that all settlement proceeds, including the $150,000 paid to the attorney, were required to be included in the taxpayer's 1990 gross income. The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, reversing in part, concluded that the taxpayer's 1990 gross income (1) included the net amount of the settlement proceeds, but (2) did not include the amount paid as a contingent fee (345 F.3d 373).

[860] A second taxpayer, who had been discharged from his job with a private employer, retained an attorney on a contingent-fee basis and filed, against the employer and its successor in ownership in an Oregon state court, a suit alleging violation of state law.

After a jury had awarded the taxpayer compensatory and punitive damages, and after resolution of all appeals and posttrial motions, the defendants (1) paid the taxpayer $4,864,547; and (2) following a formula contained in the contingent-fee contract, paid an additional $3,864,012 directly to the taxpayer's attorney.

Subsequently, the Commissioner issued to the second taxpayer--who had not included as gross income on his federal tax return the amount paid to the attorney--a notice of deficiency with respect to this amount. The Tax Court upheld the Commissioner's determination, but the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed (340 F.3d 1074).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Kennedy, J., expressing the unanimous view of the eight participating members of the court, it was held that as a general rule, when a litigant's recovery of a money judgment or a settlement constituted gross income under § 61(a), the litigant's gross income included the portion of the recovery paid to the litigant's attorney as a contingent fee. Therefore, the contingent fees paid by the two taxpayers constituted gross income under § 61(a), as:

(1) A contingent-fee agreement ought to be viewed as an anticipatory assignment to the attorney of a portion of the client's income from any litigation recovery.

(2) Although in the context of anticipatory assignments, the assignor often did not have dominion over the income at the moment of receipt:

(a) In the case of a litigation recovery, the income-generating asset was the cause of action that derived from the plaintiff's legal injury. The plaintiff retained dominion over this asset throughout the litigation.

(b) The anticipatory-assignment doctrine was not limited to instances when the precise dollar value of the assigned income was known in advance.

(c) Both taxpayers in the cases at hand had retained control over the income-generating asset and had realized a benefit by doing so.

(3) The court rejected the suggestion to treat the attorney-client relationship as a sort of business partnership or joint venture for tax purposes, for an attorney was an agent who was duty bound to act only in the interests of the principal, and so it was appropriate to treat the full amount of a client's litigation recovery as income to the principal.

Rehnquist, Ch. J., did not participate.

LAWYERS' EDITION HEADNOTES:

[LEdHN1]
INCOME TAXES § 35
INCOME TAXES § 39
-- litigant's recovery -- contingent attorneys' fees -- taxability
Headnote: [1A] [1B] [1C] [1D] [1E] [1F] [1G]

As a general rule, when a litigant's recovery of a money judgment or a settlement constituted gross income under § 61(a) of Internal Revenue Code (26 USCS [861] § 61(a))--which defined "gross income" for federal income tax purposes as "all income from whatever source derived"--the litigant's gross income included the portion of the recovery paid to the litigant's attorney as a contingent fee. Therefore, with respect to the proceeds received by two litigants in settlement of their suits alleging illegal acts by their employers--where (1) there apparently was no contention that the portions of the proceeds not used to pay the contingent fees of the attorneys who represented the litigants in their suits were not income to the litigants, (2) one litigant paid his attorney's contingent fee out of the litigant's settlement, and (3) the defendants in the other litigant's suit directly paid the contingent fee to that litigant's attorney--each litigant's gross income under § 61(a) included the amount that he paid as a contingent fee, as:

(1) The United States Supreme Court agreed with the contention of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that a contingent-fee agreement ought to be viewed as an anticipatory assignment to the attorney of a portion of the client's income from any litigation recovery.

(2) Although in the context of anticipatory assignments, the assignor often did not have dominion over the income at the moment of receipt:

(a) In that instance, the question became whether the assignor retained dominion over the income-generating asset, because the taxpayer who owned or controlled the source of the income also (i) controlled the disposition of that which the taxpayer could have received himself or herself, and (ii) diverted the payment from the taxpayer to others as the means of procuring the satisfaction of the taxpayer's wants.

(b) In the case of a litigation recovery, the income-generating asset was the cause of action that derived from the plaintiff's legal injury. The plaintiff retained dominion over this asset throughout the litigation.

(c) Although the value of a plaintiff's claim might be speculative at the moment a fee agreement was signed, the anticipatory-assignment doctrine was not limited to instances when the precise dollar value of the assigned income was known in advance.

(d) Both litigants in the consolidated cases at hand had (i) retained control over the income-generating asset,

(ii) diverted some of the income produced to another party, and (iii) realized a benefit by doing so.

(3) The court rejected the suggestion to treat the attorney-client relationship as a sort of business partnership or joint venture for tax purposes, for:

(a) An attorney was an agent who was duty bound to act only in the interests of the principal, and so it was appropriate to treat the full amount of the recovery as income to the principal.

(b) This rule applied regardless of whether the attorney-client contract or state law conferred any special rights or protections on the attorney, so long as these protections did not alter the fundamental principal-agent character of the relationship.

[LEdHN2]
INCOME TAXES § 5
-- allowable deduction -- nonretroactive application
Headnote: [2]

The American Jobs Creation Act of 2004 (118 Stat 1418)--§ 703 of which amended the Internal Revenue Code (26 USCS § § 1 et seq.) by adding Code § 62(a)(19) (26 USCS [862] § 62(a)(19)), allowing a taxpayer, in computing adjusted gross income, to deduct "attorney fees and court costs paid by, or on behalf of, the taxpayer in connection with any action involving a claim of unlawful discrimination"--was inapplicable to the cases of two taxpayers who sought to avoid paying federal income taxes on the portions of their litigation-settlement proceeds that had been paid to the taxpayers' attorneys as contingent fees, as the Act (1) was enacted after the taxpayers' cases had arisen, and (2) was not retroactive.

[LEdHN3]
INCOME TAXES § 19
-- gross income
Headnote: [3]

The definition, in § 61(a) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 USCS § 61(a)), of "gross income" for federal tax purposes as "all income from whatever source derived" extends broadly to all economic gains not otherwise exempted.

[LEdHN4]
INCOME TAXES § 39
-- anticipatory assignment of income
Headnote: [4]

With respect to the definition, in § 61(a) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 USCS § 61(a)), of "gross income" for federal tax purposes as "all income from whatever source derived," a taxpayer cannot exclude an economic gain from gross income by assigning the gain in advance to another party. The rationale for the anticipatory-assignment-of-income doctrine is the principle that gains should be taxed to those who earn them, a maxim that the United States Supreme Court has called the first principle of income taxation. The anticipatory-assignment doctrine is meant to prevent taxpayers from avoiding taxation through arrangements and contracts, however skillfully devised to prevent income when paid from vesting even for a second in the person who earned it. The rule is preventative and motivated by administrative as well as substantive concerns, so the court does not inquire whether any particular assignment has a discernible tax-avoidance purpose.

[LEdHN5]
INCOME TAXES § 19
-- attribution of income
Headnote: [5]

In an ordinary case, for purposes of determining to whom income should be attributed for federal tax purposes, attribution is resolved by asking whether a taxpayer exercises complete dominion over the income in question.

[LEdHN6]
ATTORNEYS § 14
-- relation to client -- agency
Headnote: [6]

The relationship between client and attorney, regardless of the variations in particular compensation agreements or the amount of skill and effort the attorney contributes, is a quintessential principal-agent relationship.

[LEdHN7]
ATTORNEYS § 17
-- duty to client
Headnote: [7]

Even where an attorney exercises independent judgment without supervision by, or consultation with, a client, the attorney, as an agent, is obligated to act solely on behalf of, and for the exclusive benefit of, the client-principal, rather than for the benefit of the attorney or any other party.

[LEdHN8]
ATTORNEYS § 14
ATTORNEYS § 32
INCOME TAXES § 35
MASTER AND SERVANT § 1
-- ownership -- client's claim -- accounts receivable
Headnote: [8]

The contingent-fee lawyer is not a joint owner of the client's claim in the legal sense any more than the commission salesman is a joint owner of the employer's accounts receivable. In both cases, a principal relies on an agent to realize an economic [863] gain, and the gain realized by the agent's efforts is income to the principal. The portion paid to the agent may be deductible, but absent some other provision of law it is not excludable from the principal's gross income for federal tax purposes.

[LEdHN9]
APPEAL § 1118
-- tax claims -- new theories
Headnote: [9A] [9B]

In reversing decisions by two Federal Courts of Appeals that the portions of taxpayers' proceeds from litigation settlements that were paid to the taxpayers' attorneys under contingent-fee arrangements were not required to be included in the taxpayers' gross incomes for federal income tax purposes, the United States Supreme Court declined comment on some theories proposed--by the taxpayers and in an amicus curiae brief--to exclude or deduct fees from income. In addition, the court did not reach the instance where a relator pursued a claim on behalf of the United States, as (1) these arguments, it appeared, were being presented for the first time to the Supreme Court; and (2) the court was especially reluctant to entertain novel propositions of law with broad implications for the tax system that had not been (a) advanced in earlier stages of the litigation, or (b) examined by the Courts of Appeals. Moreover, the Supreme Court did not need to address one taxpayer's contentions concerning federal statutes with fee-shifting provisions, where--even though this taxpayer had brought litigation claims under such statutes--after the taxpayer had settled the litigation, the fee paid to his attorney had been calculated solely on the basis of a private contingent-fee contract. [864]

SYLLABUS:

Respondent Banks settled his federal employment discrimination suit against a California state agency and respondent Banaitis settled his Oregon state case against his former employer, but neither included fees paid to their attorneys under contingent-fee agreements as gross income on their federal income tax returns. In each case petitioner Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued a notice of deficiency, which the Tax Court upheld. In Banks' case, the Sixth Circuit reversed in part, finding that the amount Banks paid to his attorney was not includable as gross income. In Banaitis' case, the [2] Ninth Circuit found that because Oregon law grants attorneys a superior lien in the contingent-fee portion of any recovery, that part of Banaitis' settlement was not includable as gross income.

Held:

When a litigant's recovery constitutes income, the litigant's income includes the portion of the recovery paid to the attorney as a contingent fee.

(a) Two preliminary observations help clarify why this issue is of consequence. First, taking the legal expenses as miscellaneous itemized deductions would have been of no help to respondents because the Alternative Minimum Tax establishes a tax liability floor and does not allow such deductions. Second, the American Jobs Creation Act of 2004 --which amended the Internal Revenue Code to allow a taxpayer, in computing adjusted gross income, to deduct attorney's fees such as those at issue--does not apply here because it was passed after these cases arose and is not retroactive.

(b) The Code defines "gross income" broadly to include all economic gains not otherwise exempted. Under the anticipatory assignment of income doctrine, a taxpayer cannot exclude an economic gain from gross income by assigning the [3] gain in advance to another party, e.g., Lucas v. Earl, 281 U.S. 111, 74 L. Ed. 731, 50 S. Ct. 241, because gains should be taxed "to those who earn them," id., at 114, 74 L. Ed. 731, 50 S. Ct. 241. The doctrine is meant to prevent taxpayers from avoiding taxation through arrangements and contracts devised to prevent income from vesting in the one who earned it. Id., at 115, 74 L. Ed. 731, 50 S. Ct. 241. Because the rule is preventative and motivated by administrative and substantive concerns, this Court does not inquire whether any particular assignment has a discernible tax avoidance purpose.

(c) The Court agrees with the Commissioner that a contingent-fee agreement should be viewed as an anticipatory assignment to the attorney of a portion of the client's income from any litigation recovery. In an ordinary case attribution of income is resolved by asking whether a taxpayer exercises complete dominion over the income in question. However, in the context of anticipatory assignments, where the assignor may not have dominion over the income at the moment of receipt, the question is whether the assignor retains dominion over the income-generating asset. Looking to such control preserves the principle that [4] income should be taxed to the party who earns the income and enjoys the consequent benefits. In the case of a litigation recovery the income-generating asset is the cause of action derived from the plaintiff's legal injury. The plaintiff retains dominion over this asset throughout the litigation. Respondents' counterarguments are rejected. The legal claim's value may be speculative at the moment of the assignment, but the anticipatory assignment doctrine is not limited to instances when the precise dollar value of the assigned income is known in advance. In these cases, the taxpayer retained control over the asset, diverted some of the income produced to another party, and realized a benefit by doing so. Also rejected is respondents' suggestion that the attorney-client relationship be treated as a sort of business partnership or joint venture for tax purposes. In fact, that relationship is a quintessential principal-agent relationship, for the client retains ultimate dominion and control over the underlying claim. The attorney can make tactical decisions without consulting the client, but the client still must determine whether to settle or proceed to judgment and make, as well, other [5] critical decisions. The attorney is an agent who is duty bound to act in the principal's interests, and so it is appropriate to treat the full recovery amount as income to the principal. This rule applies regardless of whether the attorney-client contract or state law confers any special rights or protections on the attorney, so long as such protections do not alter the relationship's fundamental principal-agent character. The Court declines to comment on other theories proposed by respondents and their amici, which were not advanced in earlier stages of the litigation or examined by the Courts of Appeals.

(d) This Court need not address Banks' contention that application of the anticipatory assignment principle would be inconsistent with the purpose of statutory fee-shifting provisions, such as those applicable in his case brought under 42 USC § § 1981, 1983, and 2000e et seq. [42 USCS § § 1981, 1983, and 2000e et seq.] He settled his case, and the fee paid to his attorney was calculated based solely on the contingent-fee contract. There was no court-ordered fee award or any indication in his contract with his attorney or the settlement that the contingent fee paid was in lieu [6] of statutory fees that might otherwise have been recovered. Also, the American Jobs Creation Act redresses the concern [866] for many, perhaps most, claims governed by fee-shifting statutes.

No. 03-892, 345 F.3d 373; No. 03-907, 340 F.3d 1074, reversed and remanded.

COUNSEL:

David B. Salmons argued the cause, pro hac vice, for petitioner, by special leave of court.

Philip N. Jones argued the cause for respondent in 03-907.

James R. Carty argued the cause, pro hac vice, for respondent in 03-892, by special leave of court.

JUDGES: KENNEDY, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which all other Members joined, except REHNQUIST, C. J., who took no part in the decision of the cases.

OPINIONBY: KENNEDY

OPINION: [*828] Justice Kennedy delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHR1A] [1A] The question in these consolidated cases is whether the portion of a money judgment or settlement paid to a plaintiff's attorney under a contingent-fee agreement is income to the plaintiff under the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. (2000 ed. and Supp. I [26 USCS § § 1 et seq.]). The issue divides the courts of appeals. In one of the instant cases, Banks v. Comm'r, 345 F.3d 373 (2003), the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit held the contingent-fee portion of a litigation recovery is not included [*829] in the plaintiff's gross income. The Courts of Appeals for the Fifth and Eleventh Circuits also adhere to this view, relying [7] on the holding, over Judge Wisdom's dissent, in Cotnam v. Commissioner, 263 F.2d 119, 125-126 (CA5 1959). Srivastava v. Commissioner, 220 F.3d 353, 363-365 (CA5 2000); Foster v. United States, 249 F.3d 1275, 1279-1280 (CA11 2001). In the other case under review, Banaitis v. Comm'r, 340 F.3d 1074 (2003), the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that the portion of the recovery paid to the attorney as a contingent fee is excluded from the plaintiff's gross income if state law gives the plaintiff's attorney a special property interest in the fee, but not otherwise. Six Courts of Appeals have held the entire litigation recovery, including the portion paid to an attorney as a contingent fee, is income to the plaintiff. Some of these Courts of Appeals discuss state law, but little of their analysis appears to turn on this factor. Raymond v. United States, 355 F.3d 107, 113-116 (CA2 2004); Kenseth v. Comm'r, 259 F.3d 881, 883-884 (CA7 2001); Baylin v. United States, 43 F.3d 1451, 1454-1455 (CA Fed. 1995). Other Courts of Appeals [8] have been explicit that the fee portion of the recovery is always income to the plaintiff regardless of the nuances of state law. O'Brien v. Commissioner, 38 T. C. 707, 712 (1962), aff'd, 319 F.2d 532 (CA3 1963) (per curiam); Young v. Comm'r, 240 F.3d 369, 377-379 (CA4 2001); Hukkanen-Campbell v. Comm'r, 274 F.3d 1312, 1313-1314 (CA10 2001). We granted certiorari to resolve the conflict. 541 U.S. 958, 541 U.S. 958, 158 L. Ed. 2d 398, 124 S. Ct. 1712 (2004).

We hold that, as a general rule, when a litigant's recovery constitutes income, the litigant's income includes the portion of the recovery paid to the attorney as a contingent fee. We reverse the decisions of the Courts of Appeals for the Sixth and Ninth Circuits.

I

A. Commissioner

v Banks

In 1986, respondent John W. Banks, II, was fired from his job as an educational consultant with the California Department of Education. He retained an attorney on a contingent-fee basis and filed a civil suit against the employer in a United [867] States District Court. The complaint alleged employment discrimination in violation of 42 U.S.C. § § 1981 and 1983 [42 USCS § § 1981 and 1983], Title [9] VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.[42 USCS § § 2000e et seq.], and Cal. Govt. Code Ann. § 12965 (West 1986). The original complaint asserted various additional claims under state law, but Banks later abandoned these. After trial commenced in 1990, the parties settled for $464,000. Banks paid $150,000 of this amount to his attorney pursuant to the fee agreement.

Banks did not include any of the $464,000 in settlement proceeds as gross income in his 1990 federal income tax return. In 1997 the Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued Banks a notice of deficiency for the 1990 tax year. The Tax Court upheld the Commissioner's determination, finding that all the settlement proceeds, including the $150,000 Banks had paid to his attorney, must be included in Banks' gross income.

The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit reversed in part. 345 F.3d 373 (2003). It agreed the net amount received by Banks was included in gross income but not the amount paid to the attorney. Relying on its prior decision in Estate of Clarks v. United States, 202 F.3d 854 (2000), the court held the contingent-fee agreement was not an [10] anticipatory assignment of Banks' income because the litigation recovery was not already earned, vested, or even relatively certain to be paid [*830] when the contingent-fee contract was made. A contingent-fee arrangement, the court reasoned, is more like a partial assignment of income-producing property than an assignment of income. The attorney is not the mere beneficiary of the client's largess, but rather earns his fee through skill and diligence. 345 F.3d, at 384-385 (quoting Estate of Clarks, supra, at 857-858). This reasoning, the court held, applies whether or not state law grants the attorney any special property interest (e.g., a superior lien) in part of the judgment or settlement proceeds.

B. Commissioner

v Banaitis

After leaving his job as a vice president and loan officer at the Bank of California in 1987, Sigitas J. Banaitis retained an attorney on a contingent-fee basis and brought suit in Oregon state court against the Bank of California and its successor in ownership, the Mitsubishi Bank. The complaint alleged that Mitsubishi Bank willfully interfered with Banaitis' employment contract, and that the Bank of California attempted to induce [11] Banaitis to breach his fiduciary duties to customers and discharged him when he refused. The jury awarded Banaitis compensatory and punitive damages. After resolution of all appeals and post-trial motions, the parties settled. The defendants paid $4,864,547 to Banaitis; and, following the formula set forth in the contingent-fee contract, the defendants paid an additional $3,864,012 directly to Banaitis' attorney.

Banaitis did not include the amount paid to his attorney in gross income on his federal income tax return, and the Commissioner issued a notice of deficiency. The Tax Court upheld the Commissioner's determination, but the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed. 340 F.3d 1074 (2003). In contrast to the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, the Banaitis court viewed state law as [868] pivotal. Where state law confers on the attorney no special property rights in his fee, the court said, the whole amount of the judgment or settlement ordinarily is included in the plaintiff's gross income. Id., at 1081. Oregon state law, however, like the law of some other States, grants attorneys a superior lien in the contingent-fee portion of any recovery. [12] As a result, the court held, contingent-fee agreements under Oregon law operate not as an anticipatory assignment of the client's income but as a partial transfer to the attorney of some of the client's property in the lawsuit.

II

To clarify why the issue here is of any consequence for tax purposes, two preliminary observations are useful. The first concerns the general issue of deductibility. For the tax years in question the legal expenses in these cases could have been taken as miscellaneous itemized deductions subject to the ordinary requirements, 26 U.S.C. § § 67-68 (2000 ed. and Supp. I) [26 USCS § § 67-68], but doing so would have been of no help to respondents because of the operation of the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT). For noncorporate individual taxpayers, the AMT establishes a tax liability floor equal to 26 percent of the taxpayer's "alternative minimum taxable income" (minus specified exemptions) up to $175,000, plus 28 percent of alternative minimum taxable income over $175,000. § § 55(a), (b) (2000 ed.). Alternative minimum taxable income, unlike ordinary gross income, does not allow any miscellaneous itemized deductions. § § 56(b)(1)(A)(i).

[LEdHR2] [2] Second, after these [13] cases arose Congress enacted the American Jobs Creation Act of 2004, 118 Stat 1418. Section 703 of the Act amended the Code by adding § 62(a)(19) Id., at 1546. . The amendment allows a taxpayer, in computing adjusted gross income, to deduct "attorney fees and court costs paid by, or on behalf [*831] of, the taxpayer in connection with any action involving a claim of unlawful discrimination." Ibid. The Act defines "unlawful discrimination" to include a number of specific federal statutes, § § 62(e)(1) to (16), any federal whistle-blower statute, § 62(e)(17), and any federal, state, or local law "providing for the enforcement of civil rights" or "regulating any aspect of the employment relationship . . . or prohibiting the discharge of an employee, the discrimination against an employee, or any other form of retaliation or reprisal against an employee for asserting rights or taking other actions permitted by law," § 62(e)(18) Id., at 1547-1548. These deductions are permissible even when the AMT applies. Had the Act been in force for the transactions now under review, these cases likely would not have arisen. The Act is not retroactive, however, so while it may cover future taxpayers [14] in respondents' position, it does not pertain here.

III

[LEdHR3] [3] [LEdHR4] [4] The Internal Revenue Code defines "gross income" for federal tax purposes as "all income from whatever source derived." 26 U.S.C. § 61(a) [26 USCS § 61(a)]. The definition extends broadly to all economic gains not otherwise exempted. Commissioner v. Glenshaw Glass Co., 348 U.S. 426, 429-30, 99 L. Ed. 483, 75 S. Ct. 473 (1955); Commissioner v. Jacobson, 336 U.S. 28, 49, 93 L. Ed. 477, 69 S. Ct. 358 (1949). A taxpayer cannot [869] exclude an economic gain from gross income by assigning the gain in advance to another party. Lucas v. Earl, 281 U.S. 111, 74 L. Ed. 731, 50 S. Ct. 241 (1930); Comm'r v. Sunnen, 333 U.S. 591, 604, 92 L. Ed. 898, 68 S. Ct. 715 (1948); Helvering v. Horst, 311 U.S. 112, 116-117, 85 L. Ed. 75, 61 S. Ct. 144 (1940). The rationale for the so-called anticipatory assignment of income doctrine is the principle that gains should be taxed "to those who earn them," Lucas, supra, at 114, 74 L. Ed. 2d 731, 50 S. Ct. 241, a maxim we have called "the first principle of income taxation," Comm'r v. Culbertson, 337 U.S. 733, 739-740, 93 L. Ed. 1659, 69 S. Ct. 1210 (1949). The anticipatory assignment doctrine is meant to prevent taxpayers from avoiding taxation through "arrangements [15] and contracts however skillfully devised to prevent [income] when paid from vesting even for a second in the man who earned it." Lucas, 281 U.S., at 115, 74 L. Ed. 731, 50 S. Ct. 241. The rule is preventative and motivated by administrative as well as substantive concerns, so we do not inquire whether any particular assignment has a discernible tax avoidance purpose. As Lucas explained, "no distinction can be taken according to the motives leading to the arrangement by which the fruits are attributed to a different tree from that on which they grew." Ibid.

[LEdHR1B] [1B] Respondents argue that the anticipatory assignment doctrine is a judge-made antifraud rule with no relevance to contingent-fee contracts of the sort at issue here. The Commissioner maintains that a contingent-fee agreement should be viewed as an anticipatory assignment to the attorney of a portion of the client's income from any litigation recovery. We agree with the Commissioner.

[LEdHR1C] [1C] [LEdHR5] [5] In an ordinary case attribution of income is resolved by asking whether a taxpayer exercises complete dominion over the income in question. Glenshaw Glass Co., supra, at 431, 99 L. Ed. 2d 483, 75 S. Ct. 473; see also Commissioner v. Indianapolis Power & Light Co., 493 U.S. 203, 209, 107 L. Ed. 2d 591, 110 S. Ct. 589 (1990); [16] Commissioner v. First Security Bank of Utah, N. A., 405 U.S. 394, 403, 31 L. Ed. 2d 318, 92 S. Ct. 1085 (1972). In the context of anticipatory assignments, however, the assignor often does not have dominion over the income at the moment of receipt. In that instance the question becomes whether the assignor [*832] retains dominion over the income-generating asset, because the taxpayer "who owns or controls the source of the income, also controls the disposition of that which he could have received himself and diverts the payment from himself to others as the means of procuring the satisfaction of his wants." Horst, supra, at 116-117, 85 L. Ed. 75, 61 S. Ct. 144. See also Lucas, supra, at 114-115, 74 L. Ed. 731, 50 S. Ct. 241; Helvering v. Eubank, 311 U.S. 122, 124-125, 85 L. Ed. 81, 61 S. Ct. 149 (1940); Sunnen, supra, at 604, 92 L. Ed. 898, 68 S. Ct. 715. Looking to control over the income-generating asset, then, preserves the principle that income should be taxed to the party who earns the income and enjoys the consequent benefits.

[LEdHR1D] [1D] In the case of a litigation recovery the income-generating asset is the cause of action that derives from the plaintiff's legal injury. The plaintiff retains dominion over this asset throughout the litigation. [17] We do not understand respondents to argue otherwise. Rather, respondents [870] advance two counterarguments. First, they say that, in contrast to the bond coupons assigned in Horst, the value of a legal claim is speculative at the moment of assignment, and may be worth nothing at all. Second, respondents insist that the claimant's legal injury is not the only source of the ultimate recovery. The attorney, according to respondents, also contributes income-generating assets--effort and expertise--without which the claimant likely could not prevail. On these premises respondents urge us to treat a contingent-fee agreement as establishing, for tax purposes, something like a joint venture or partnership in which the client and attorney combine their respective assets--the client's claim and the attorney's skill--and apportion any resulting profits.

We reject respondents' arguments. Though the value of the plaintiff's claim may be speculative at the moment the fee agreement is signed, the anticipatory assignment doctrine is not limited to instances when the precise dollar value of the assigned income is known in advance. Lucas, supra; United States v. Basye, 410 U.S. 441, 445, 450-452, 35 L. Ed. 2d 412, 93 S. Ct. 1080 (1973). [18] Though Horst involved an anticipatory assignment of a predetermined sum to be paid on a specific date, the holding in that case did not depend on ascertaining a liquidated amount at the time of assignment. In the cases before us, as in Horst, the taxpayer retained control over the income-generating asset, diverted some of the income produced to another party, and realized a benefit by doing so. As Judge Wesley correctly concluded in a recent case, the rationale of Horst applies fully to a contingent-fee contract. Raymond v. United States, 355 F.3d, at 115-116. That the amount of income the asset would produce was uncertain at the moment of assignment is of no consequence.

[LEdHR1E] [1E] [LEdHR6] [6] [LEdHR7] [7] We further reject the suggestion to treat the attorney-client relationship as a sort of business partnership or joint venture for tax purposes. The relationship between client and attorney, regardless of the variations in particular compensation agreements or the amount of skill and effort the attorney contributes, is a quintessential principal-agent relationship. Restatement (Second) of Agency § 1, Comment e (1957) (hereinafter Restatement); ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct [19] Rule 1.3, Comments 1, 1.7 1 (2002). The client may rely on the attorney's expertise and special skills to achieve a result the client could not achieve alone. That, however, is true of most principal-agent relationships, and it does not alter the fact that the client retains ultimate dominion and control over the underlying claim. The control is evident when it is noted that, although the attorney can [*833] make tactical decisions without consulting the client, the plaintiff still must determine whether to settle or proceed to judgment and make, as well, other critical decisions. Even where the attorney exercises independent judgment without supervision by, or consultation with, the client, the attorney, as an agent, is obligated to act solely on behalf of, and for the exclusive benefit of, the client-principal, rather than for the benefit of the attorney or any other party. Restatement § § 13, 39, 387.

[LEdHR1F] [1F] [LEdHR8] [8] The attorney is an agent who is duty bound to act only in the interests of the principal, and so it is appropriate [871] to treat the full amount of the recovery as income to the principal. In this respect Judge Posner's observation is apt: "[T]he contingent-fee lawyer [is not] a joint owner of [20] his client's claim in the legal sense any more than the commission salesman is a joint owner of his employer's accounts receivable." Kenseth, 259 F.3d, at 883. In both cases a principal relies on an agent to realize an economic gain, and the gain realized by the agent's efforts is income to the principal. The portion paid to the agent may be deductible, but absent some other provision of law it is not excludable from the principal's gross income.

[LEdHR1G] [1G] This rule applies whether or not the attorney-client contract or state law confers any special rights or protections on the attorney, so long as these protections do not alter the fundamental principal-agent character of the relationship. Cf. Restatement § 13, Comment b, and § 14G, Comment a (an agency relationship is created where a principal assigns a chose in action to an assignee for collection and grants the assignee a security interest in the claim against the assignor's debtor in order to compensate the assignee for his collection efforts). State laws vary with respect to the strength of an attorney's security interest in a contingent fee and the remedies available to an attorney should the client discharge [21] or attempt to defraud the attorney. No state laws of which we are aware, however, even those that purport to give attorneys an "ownership" interest in their fees, e.g., 340 F.3d, at 1082-1083 (discussing Oregon law); Cotnam, 263 F.2d, at 125 (discussing Alabama law), convert the attorney from an agent to a partner.

[LEdHR9A] [9A] Respondents and their amici propose other theories to exclude fees from income or permit deductibility. These suggestions include: (1) The contingent-fee agreement establishes a Subchapter K partnership under 26 U.S.C. § § 702, 704, and 761 [26 USCS § § 702, 704, and 761], Brief for Respondent Banaitis in No. 03-907, p 5-21; (2) litigation recoveries are proceeds from disposition of property, so the attorney's fee should be subtracted as a capital expense pursuant to § § 1001, 1012, and 1016, Brief for Association of Trial Lawyers of America as Amicus Curiae 23-28, Brief for Charles Davenport as Amicus Curiae 3-13; and (3) the fees are deductible reimbursed employee business expenses under § 62(a)(2)(A) (2000 ed. and Supp I), Brief for Stephen Cohen as Amicus Curiae. These arguments, it appears, are being presented for the first time [22] to this Court. We are especially reluctant to entertain novel propositions of law with broad implications for the tax system that were not advanced in earlier stages of the litigation and not examined by the Courts of Appeals. We decline comment on these supplementary theories. In addition, we do not reach the instance where a relator pursues a claim on behalf of the United States. Brief for Taxpayers Against Fraud Education Fund as Amicus Curiae 10-20.

IV

[LEdHR9B] [9B] The foregoing suffices to dispose of Banaitis' case. Banks' case, however, involves a further consideration. Banks [*834] brought his claims under federal statutes that authorize fee awards to prevailing plaintiffs' attorneys. He contends that application of the anticipatory assignment [872] principle would be inconsistent with the purpose of statutory fee shifting provisions. See Venegas v. Mitchell, 495 U.S. 82, 86, 109 L. Ed. 2d 74, 110 S. Ct. 1679 (1990) (observing that statutory fees enable "plaintiffs to employ reasonably competent lawyers without cost to themselves if they prevail"). In the federal system statutory fees are typically awarded by the court under the lodestar approach, Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 433, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40, 103 S. Ct. 1933 (1983), [23] and the plaintiff usually has little control over the amount awarded. Sometimes, as when the plaintiff seeks only injunctive relief, or when the statute caps plaintiffs' recoveries, or when for other reasons damages are substantially less than attorney's fees, court-awarded attorney's fees can exceed a plaintiff's monetary recovery. See, e.g., Riverside v. Rivera, 477 U.S. 561, 564-565, 91 L. Ed. 2d 466, 106 S. Ct. 2686 (1986) (compensatory and punitive damages of $33,350; attorney's fee award of $245,456.25). Treating the fee award as income to the plaintiff in such cases, it is argued, can lead to the perverse result that the plaintiff loses money by winning the suit. Furthermore, it is urged that treating statutory fee awards as income to plaintiffs would undermine the effectiveness of fee-shifting statutes in deputizing plaintiffs and their lawyers to act as private attorneys general.

We need not address these claims. After Banks settled his case, the fee paid to his attorney was calculated solely on the basis of the private contingent-fee contract. There was no court-ordered fee award, nor was there any indication in Banks' contract with his attorney, or in the settlement agreement with [24] the defendant, that the contingent fee paid to Banks' attorney was in lieu of statutory fees Banks might otherwise have been entitled to recover. Also, the amendment added by the American Jobs Creation Act redresses the concern for many, perhaps most, claims governed by fee-shifting statutes.

* * *

For the reasons stated, the judgments of the Courts of Appeals for the Sixth and Ninth Circuits are reversed, and the cases are remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

The Chief Justice took no part in the decision of these cases.

REFERENCES: Go To Full Text Opinion

Go To Supreme Court Brief(s)

Go To Supreme Court Brief(s)

Go To Supreme Court Transcripts

33A Am Jur 2d, Federal Taxation (2005) PP12000 et seq.

26 USCS § § 61(a), 62(a)(19)

L Ed Digest, Income Taxes § § 35, 39

L Ed Index, Income Taxes

Annotation References

Supreme Court's views as to whether enactment, amendment, or repeal of statute pending appeal applies to such appeal. [25] 108 L Ed 2d 1061.

Construction and application of internal revenue statute (§ 7805(b), Code of 1954; § 3791(b), Code of 1939) relating to retroactivity of rulings and regulations. 1 L Ed 2d 2051.

Damages for allegedly wrongful interference with employment rights as received "on account of personal injuries," so as to be excludable from income tax under 26 U.S.C.A. § 104(a)(2) [26 USCS § 104(a)(2)]. 106 ALR Fed 321.

Effect of contingent fee contract on fee award authorized by federal statute. 76 ALR Fed 347.

Propriety of considering future income taxes in awarding damages under Federal Tort Claims Act. 47 ALR Fed 735.

Validity, construction, and effect of contract providing for contingent fee to defendant's attorney. 9 ALR4th 191.